

Suppose that you really care about the origins of life on earth. Does that fact that no biologist can tell you what the origins in fact were mean that you should not look at the arguments given for the competing theories?

That does not seem reasonable.

Or take a less intellectual example. In the recent past many of you spent some time thinking about where would be the best place for you to go to college. Was there a proof you could find, or some infallible authority you could consult?

Here is the second frustrated response:

A large, light gray speech bubble with a dark gray outline and a drop shadow. The bubble has a tail pointing towards the bottom left corner. Inside the bubble, the text is centered and reads: "If different people disagree about the right answers to these questions, then there's no point thinking about them!"

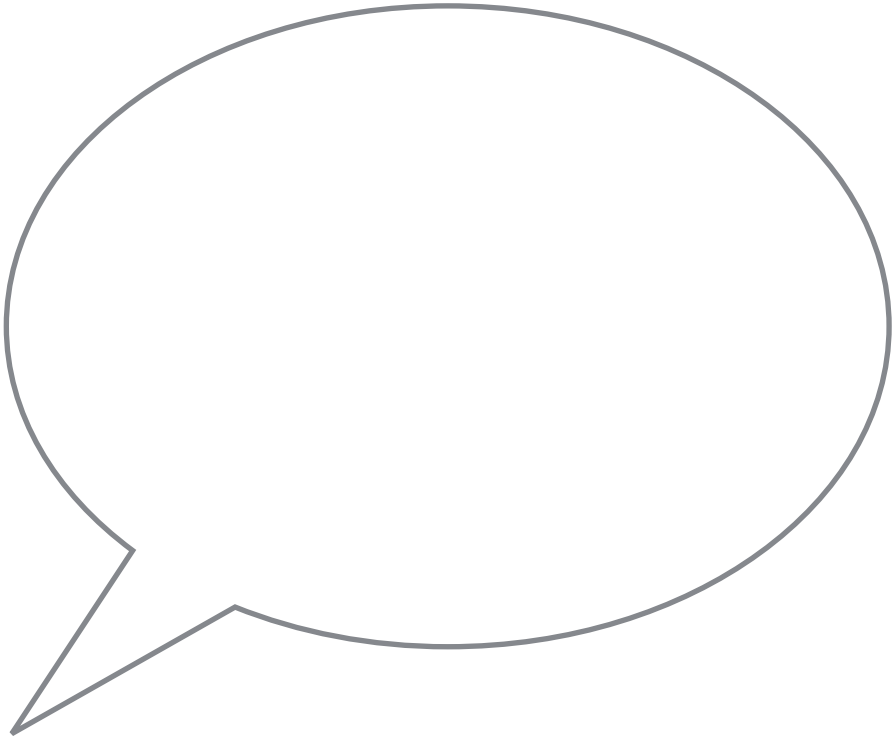

“If different people
disagree about the right
answers to these questions,
then there’s no point
thinking about them!”

you should not look at the arguments given for the competing theories?

Suppose that you really are about the origins of life on earth. Does that fact that no biologist can tell you what the origins in fact were mean that

That doesn't seem reasonable.

answer these questions, if arguments about how to

we can't know for sure

point of looking at which is right?"

That doesn't seem reasonable.

that fact that no biologist can tell you what the origins in fact were mean that you should not look at the arguments given for the competing theories?

Support further that you really care about the origins of life on earth. Des could be. Was there a proof you could find, or some infallible authority you could consist?

some time thinking about where would be the best place for you to go to

Or take a less intellectual example. In the recent past many of you spent

'If different people

then there's no point

disagree about the right

answers to these questions;

thinking about them!’

could be. Was there a proof you could find, or some infallible authority you could consist?

some time thinking about where would be the best place for you to go to

Or take as intellectual example. In the recent past many of you spent