

If there is no life
after death, is death a bad thing?

Is there life after death?

A large orange circle with a thin grey border, containing white text.

If life after death
is possible, is it desirable?

When we were discussing the nature of persons, we discussed the question of whether life after death is possible. Life after death seems pretty clear possible on proponent of soul survival or psychological views; matters are trickier if materialism about persons is true, but even here there is room to believe in the possibility of life after death.

But of course even if life after death is possible, that doesn't tell us whether or not there is life after death. Let's turn to that question now.

There are a number of arguments for and against life after death that I'll mention only briefly and then set aside.

The first is what might be called the argument from religion. There are as many versions of this argument as there are religions; here is one

1. Christianity is true.

2. If Christianity is true, there is life after death.

C. There is life after death.

The second argument I am going to mention and then set aside is the argument from near death experiences.

Many people who come very close to death report similar kinds of experiences — a feeling of looking down at one's body, of feeling disembodied, of moving towards a light. One might argue from these experiences as follows:

1. People have near death experiences.
2. If there were no life after death, people would not have near death experiences.

C. There is life after death.

The key premise here is obviously the second one. A serious assessment of it would have to look at the details of the kinds of near death experiences people report, and consideration of the possible explanations of these experiences.

It is worth noting that this is an argument for life after death, but cannot in any obvious way (unlike the argument from religion) be turned into an argument for immortality.

materialism about persons is true, but even here there is room to believe in whether life after death is possible. Life after death seems pretty clear possible the possibility of life after death.

When we're discussing the nature of persons, we discussed the question of on prevention of soul survival or psychological views; matters are trickier if not there is life after death. Let's turn to that question now.

But of course even if life after death is possible, that doesn't tell us whether or mention only briefly and then set aside.

There are a number of arguments for and against life after death that I'll

The first is what might be called the argument from religion. There are as many versions of this argument as there are religions; here is one

The second argument I am going to mention and then set aside is the argument from near death experiences.

— feeling looking down at one's body, feeling disembodied, of moving

Many people who've had very close to death reports similar kinds of experiences towards light. One might argue from the experience as follows:

1. People have nearly death experiences.

not have near death experiences.

2. If there were no life after death, people would

C. There is a tie at 1.

The key premise here is obviously the second one. A serious assessment of it report, and consideration of the possible explanations of these experiences.

would have to look at the details of the kinds of near death experiences people

1. People have nearly identical experiences.

2. If there were no life after death, people would not have near death experiences.

c. There is life after death.

It is worth noting that this is an argument for life after death, but cannot in any obvious way (unlike the argument from religion) turned into an argument for immortality.

The second argument I am going to mention and then set aside is the argument from near death experiences.

— feeling old, looking down at one's body, feeling disoriented, moving

Many people who have very close to death report similar kinds of experiences towards a light. One might argue from the experience as follows:

It is worth noting that this is an argument for life after death, but can't in any other way (unlike the argument from religion) turned into an argument for immortality.