

Indeed, we can construct a simple argument against the Doubt $\rightarrow$ No Belief rule which was central in the argument for skepticism.

1. I should believe that I have hands.
2. I cannot rule out a situation in which all of my experiences of hands are hallucinations, and in which I have no hands.

C. Sometimes I should believe P, even if I cannot rule out a situation which would make P false. (1,2)

THE MOOREAN ANTI-SKEPTICAL ARGUMENT

We can now put our two arguments side by side.
