

Moore anticipates the objection that he should not believe the premises of his argument, and responds as follows:

Moore is emphasizing the fact that, in ordinary life, we do take ourselves to know claims like the premises of his argument. So why should we now, once we start doing philosophy, discard these beliefs?

“I certainly did at the moment know that which I expressed by the combination of certain gestures with saying the words ‘There is one hand and here is another.’ ... How absurd it would be to suggest that I did not know it, but only believed it, and that perhaps it was not the case! You might as well suggest that I do not know that I am now standing up and talking - that perhaps after all I’m not, and that it’s not quite certain that I am.”

Moore anticipates the objection that he should not believe the premises of his argument, and responds as follows:

claim like the premises of his argument. So why should we start doing philosophy, discard these beliefs?

More is emphasizing the fact that, in ordinary life, we do take ourselves to know

'I certainly did at the moment know that which I expressed by the combination of certaining gestures with saying the words suggest that I did not know it, but only believed it, and that perhaps it was not do not know that I am standing up and the case! You might as well suggest that I talking - that perhaps after all I'm not,

'There is no hand here is

win

.

9

9

and that it's not quiet in that I and her; How absurd it would be to