

What should I believe?

If you think about it, our initial question really breaks down into two sub-questions.

When should I form a new belief?

When should I discard
one of my beliefs?

It is very natural to think that these questions should have general answers. Suppose, for example, that your friend typically forms beliefs about his future based on his horoscope. It seems plausible that he should not be forming beliefs in this way. But surely there is some general rule which explains why this is the case.

What should I believe?

if you think about it, our initial question really breaks down into two sub-questions.

What should I find a

never die?

When should I discard
one of my beliefs?

not forming beliefs in this way. But surely there is some general rule about his future based on his hopes. It seems plausible that he should

which explains why this is the case.

answer. Suppose, for example, that your friend typically forms beliefs

It is very natural to think that these questions should have general not forming beliefs in this way. But surely there is some general rule about his future based on his hopes. It seems plausible that he should

which explains why this is the case.

answer. Suppose, for example, that your friend typically forms beliefs

It is very natural to think that these questions should have general