

Now let's look at a tougher case.

My Division. My body is fatally injured, as are the brains of my two brothers. My brain is divided, and each half is successfully transplanted into the body of one of my brothers. Each of the resulting people believes that he is me, seems to remember living my life, has my character, and is in every other way psychologically continuous with me. And he has a body that is very like mine.

Let's call the resulting people Lefty and Righty. Then we seem to have four options:

- (1) You survive as A.
- (2) You survive as B.
- (3) You survive as both A and B.
- (4) You do not survive.

Parfit argues that none of (1)–(3) can be true. So, he thinks, we are stuck with option (4): you do not survive.

But this looks bad for the psychological theory; after all, you seem to have the right kinds of connections to both A and B.

Hemisphere Transplant

non-branching psychological connection

This would explain why you can survive Hemisphere Transplant but not My Division.

What could the relevant difference be? One difference is that in the case of Hemisphere Transplant (but not My Division) the psychological connection between the individuals is a non-branching connection. So some psychological theorists say that for you to survive at some later time, you must stand in a certain psychological connection to that thing and to nothing else.

Let's call the resulting people Lefty and Righty. Then we see to have four options:

(1) You survive as A.

(3) You survive as both A and B.

(4) You do not survive.

(2) You survive as B.

Parfit argues that none of (1)-(3) can be true. So, he thinks, we are stuck with option(4): you do not survive.

But this book bad for the psychological theory; after all, you seem to have the right kinds of connections to both A and B.

Hemispheric Transplant

This would explain why you can survive Hemispheric Transplant but not My

D i v i s i o n .

theorists say that for you to survive at some later time, you must stand in a certain psychological connection to that thing and to nothing else.

between the individual is a non-branching connection. Some psychological

Hemispheric Transplant (but not My Division) the psychological connection

This would explain why you can survive Heart Transplant but not My DiviSion.