

Some people think that philosophy is of no relevance to everyday concerns.

I hope that our class has disabused you of this notion. However, in this last class, I would like to turn the tools of philosophical analysis on two questions of great current concern.

Was the College Football Playoff
committee's decision to exclude
Notre Dame competent, or incompetent?

Was the College Football Playoff committee's decision to exclude Notre Dame honest, or corrupt?

Logically that there are four exclusive and exhaustive possibilities.

The decision
was competent
and honest.

The decision
was competent
and corrupt.

The decision
was
incompetent
and honest.

The decision
was
incompetent
and corrupt.

Here is an argument against the first possibility.

1. If the committee's decision was competent and honest, then the committee did not rely on absurd principles in making its decision.
2. The committee relied on absurd principles in making its decision.

C. The committee's decision was not competent and honest. (1,2)

The argument is valid, and the first premise is obvious. It remains therefore to demonstrate the second premise.

The committee's task is to rank the country's football teams from best to worst, based on their performance. This is a general kind of task. One might also seek to similarly rank the best universities, or best philosophy departments, or best cars, or whatever.

1. If the committee's decision was competent and honest, then the committee did not rely on absurd principles in making its decision.
2. The committee relied on absurd principles in making its decision.

C. The committee's decision was not competent and honest. (1,2)

would like to turn the topic of philosophical analysis into questions of great hope that our class has disabled you of this notion. However, in this last class, I current concern.

Was the College Football Playoff
committee's decision to exclude
Notre Dame competent, or
incompetent?

Was the College Football Playoff
committee's decision to exclude
Notre Dame honest, or corrupt?

The decision
was competent
and honest.

The decision
was competent
and corrupt.

The decision
was
incompetent
and corrupt.

1. If the committee's decision was competent and honest, then the committee did not rely on absurd principles in making its decision.
2. The committee relied on absurd principles in making its decision.

C. The committee's decision was not competent and honest. (1,2)

remains therefore to demonstrate the second premise.

The argument is valid, and the first premise is obvious. It the best universities, or best philosophy departments, or best cars, or whatever.

The committee's task is to rank the country's football teams from best to worst, based on their performance. This is a general kind of task. One might also seek to similarly rank

Here is an argument against the first possibility.