

moral
realism

moral
nihilism

moral relativism

Let's return to moral realism, the view that there are objective facts about what is right and wrong which are not relative to a culture or group.

One reason why people are reluctant to accept moral realism is that it seems to imply a lack of respect for distinct moral perspectives. If we say that our moral views are the objectively correct ones, doesn't that involve unfairly privileging ourselves above other groups and cultures, which might have an equal claim on the truth?

facts about what is right and wrong which are not relative to

Let's return to moral realism, the view that there are objective cultureorgroup.

that it seems to imply a lack of respect for distinct moral correct ones, doesn't that involve unfairly privileging perspectives. If we say that our moral views are objectively

One reason why people are reluctant to accept moral realism is claiming that truth?

abvethergroups and cultures, which might have an equal