

moral realism

moral nihilism

moral relativism

So, even if seems at first that one can argue for moral relativism on the basis of moral disagreement, in the end the moral relativist has trouble making sense of that disagreement.

Let's turn to moral nihilism to see whether it can do any better.

The moral nihilist simply denies that there are any moral facts — so she rejects both moral realism (which says that there are such facts, and that they are objective) and moral relativism (which says that there are such facts, and that they are relative).

But if there are no moral facts, what are we doing when we go around saying that certain things are good or bad?

trouble making sense of that disagreement.

disagreement, in the end the moral relativist has

So, even if seems at first that one can argue for moral relativism

Let's turn to moral nihilism to see whether it can do any better.

are such facts, and that they are relative).

says that there are such facts, and that they are moral facts — so she rejects both moral realism (which

The moral nihilist simply denies that there are any objective) and moral relativism (which says that there

But if there are no moral facts, what are we doing when we go around saying that certain things are good or bad?

But if there are no moral facts, what are we doing when we go around bad?

saying that certain things are good or