

moral realism

moral nihilism

A solid green circle with a subtle drop shadow, containing the text 'moral relativism' in white, bold, sans-serif font.

moral relativism

We actually get two quite different views expressed in this passage from

Benedict:

An action is morally good in a culture just in case people in that culture approve of the action.

An action is morally good in a culture just in case people in that culture habitually perform the action.

These are different, because there can be actions which are habitual in a culture despite not being approved of in that culture. Which of these seems more plausible?

“We do not any longer make the mistake of deriving the morality of our locality an decade direct from the inevitable constitution of human nature. ... We recognize that morality differs in every society, and is a convenient term for socially approved habits. Mankind has always preferred to say “It is morally good” rather than “It is habitual” [b]ut historically the two phrases are synonymous.”

We actually get two quite different views expressed in this passage from

Benedit:

eventually just in case people in acquiring in.

An action is morally good in a that are appropriate of the

An action is morally good in a the air conditioner.

eventually just in case people in that value habitually perform despite not being approved in that culture. Which of these men are

These are different, because there are actions which are habitual in a culture plausible?

the two phrases are synonymous;

deadeadifindieitabde than ‘‘It is habitual’’. [b]ut historically society, and is a convenient term for deriving their morality from local identity and socially approved habits. Man has always

‘‘We do not any longer make the mistake of conistituitur in: We recognize that morality differs in every preferred to say 'It is not a 11y good' rather eventually just in case people in acaiin.

An action is morally good in a that all these are appropriate of the