

moral realism

moral nihilism

moral relativism

However, even if emotivism seems plausible for sentences like “Stealing is wrong”, it does not fit other uses of ethical language as well. Consider, for example past tense sentences like

‘‘The Athenians were wrong to put Socrates to death.’’

could this really mean:

‘‘Athenians, don’t put Socrates to death!’’

This scene is absurd.

‘‘Boo, ancient Athenians!’’

'Stealing is wrong', it does not fit our uses of ethical

language as well. Consider, for example past tense sentences

However, even if emotivism seems plausible for sentences like

like

'The Athenians were wrong to start to do it in 2

‘‘Athenians, don’t put Socrates to death!’’

‘Bo, ancient Athens!’