

moral realism

moral
nihilism

A solid green circle with a subtle drop shadow, containing the text "moral relativism" in white, bold, sans-serif font.

moral relativism

The moral relativist has an answer, which Benedict states
nicely:

On this view, when we say that an action is good, we are just saying that it is the sort of action we do ('it is habitual') or the sort of action of which we approve. Since different cultures do different things and approve of different things, it is no mystery at all that they say different things about what is good.

“We do not any longer make the mistake of deriving the morality of our locality an decade direct from the inevitable constitution of human nature. ... We recognize that morality differs in every society, and is a convenient term for socially approved habits. Mankind has always preferred to say “It is morally good” rather than “It is habitual” [b]ut historically the two phrases are synonymous.”

The moral relativist has an answer, which Benedict states

nicely:

things, it is not mystery at all that they say different things about what is good.

On this view, when we say that an action is good, we are just saying that it is the sort of action we do ('it is habitual') or the sort of action of which we approve. Since different cultures do different things and approve different

“We do not any longer make the mistake of deriving the morality of our locality and deduce direct from the inevitable constitution of human nature. ... We recognize that morality differs in every society, and is a convenient term for socially approved habits. Mankind has always preferred to say “It is morally good” rather than “It is habitual” [b]ut historically the two phrases are synonymous.”

‘‘We do not any longer make the mistake of deriving the morality of our locality an decade direct from the inevitable constitution of human nature. ... We recognize that morality differs in every society, and is a convenient term for socially approved habits. Mankind has always preferred to say ‘‘It is morally good’’ rather than ‘‘It is habitual’’ [b]ut historically the two phrases are synonymous.’’