

moral realism

moral nihilism

moral relativism

Other problems arise with uses of ethical language in more complex sentences. For example, the following sentence seems to make sense:

If stealing is wrong, then Bob would never steal.

But consider how the motivist might analyze this sentence:

If don't steal!, then Bob would never steal.

This doesn't just seem like the wrong analysis; it is not even grammatical. The problem seems to be that we cannot grammatically use imperatives or interjections in the "if" part of an "if-then" sentence, even though we can use ethical sentences in that way. It seems to follow that ethical sentences can't just be disguised imperatives or interjections.

If Boo:stealing, then Bob would never steal.

Other problems arise with use of ethnic language in sentences to make sense:

more complex sentences. For example, the following

If stealing is wrong, then Bob will never starts again.

If don't steal!, then Bob will never stall.

original intentions.

This doesn't just seem like the wrong analysis; it is not even grammatical. The then “if” part of an “if-then” sentence, even though we can use ethical sentences in problems that we cannot grammatically use in preterite that way. It seems to follow that ethical sentences can't just be disguised imperatives

st. ed. 1.

If Bob: stealing, then Bob would never