

Dichotomy

Non-universality

Proportion- ality

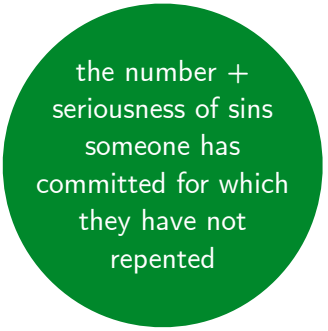

Continuity

A large, solid orange circle serves as the background for the text.

the number of sins
someone has committed

the number of sins
someone has committed + how serious they are

A large green circle is centered on a white background. Inside the circle, the text "the number + seriousness of sins someone has committed for which they have not repented" is written in a white, sans-serif font, arranged in six lines.

the number + seriousness of sins
someone has committed for which they have not repented

the person's faith and trust in God

the person's decision to be with God

Let's turn to our last option: rejecting Proportionality.

Isn't it plausible that this professor is just precisely because have decided to treat very similar students very differently?

different ways:

This might seem at first like a tough way to go. Here's an example of treating people who are in relevant respects very similar in

The instructor of an introductory philosophy class has graduating senior. He decides that every student with a final average of 89.50 or greater will receive an A, and tired of the diversity of final grades for students from every student with a final average lower than that will irecivive air.

which he is forced to choose, and decides to simply his

The dichotomy is prof

The professor

which he is forced to choose, and decides to simply his

The instructor of an introductory philosophy class has

tired of the diversity of final grades for students from grading scheme. He decides that every student with a final average of 89.50 or greater will receive an A, and

every student with a final average lower than that will recovered. $\square$

from the Bible might be used to cast doubt on Proportionality.

Despite this, as I said in the article, a parallel

the paradox of heaven and hell replies to the paradox

evil & lives
not worth
living

“The kingdom of heaven is like a landowner who went out early in the morning to hire men to work in his vineyard. He agreed to pay them a denarius for the day. About the third hour he went out and found some people in the marketplace doing nothing. He told them, “You also go and work in my vineyard and I will pay you what is right.” So they went. He went out again in the sixth hour and the ninth hour and did the same thing.

About the eleventh hour he went out and found still others standing around doing nothing. He asked them, “Why have you been standing around all day doing nothing?” “No one has hired us,” they replied. He said to them, “You also go and work in my vineyard.”

When evening came, the owner of the vineyard asked his foreman to call in the workers and pay them their wages, starting with the ones who were hired last. The workers who were hired about the eleventh hour each received a denarius. So those who were hired first expected to receive more. But each one of them also received a denarius.

When they received it, they began to grumble against the landowner, “These men who were hired last have worked only one hour, and you have made them equal to us who have worked in the heat all day.”

The landowner said, “Friend, I am not being unfair to you. Didn’t you agree to work for a denarius? Take your pay and go. I want to pay the people who were hired last the same as I paid you. Don’t I have the right to do what I want with my own money? Or are you envious because I am generous?”

Isn't it plausible that this professor is unjustly precisely because

have decided to treat very similar students very differently?

different ways:

This might seem at first like a tough way to go. Here's an example of treating people who are irrelevant respects very similar in from the Bible might be used to cast doubt on Propriety.

Despite this, as I point out later in the article, a parallel

“The kingdom of heaven is like a landowner who went out early in the morning to hire men to work in his vineyard. He agreed to pay them a denarius for the day. About the third hour he went out and found some people in the marketplace doing nothing. He told them, “You also go and work in my vineyard and I will pay you what is right.” So they went. He went out again in the sixth hour and the ninth hour and did the same thing.

About the eleventh hour he went out and found still others standing around doing nothing. He asked them, “Why have you been standing around all day doing nothing?” “No one has hired us,” they replied. He said to them, “You also go and work in my vineyard.”

When evening came, the owner of the vineyard asked his foreman to call in the workers and pay them their wages, starting with the ones who were hired last. The workers who were hired about the eleventh hour each received a denarius. So those who were hired first expected to receive more. But each one of them also received a denarius.

When they received it, they began to grumble against the landowner, “These men who were hired last have worked only one hour, and you have made them equal to us who have worked in the heat all day.”

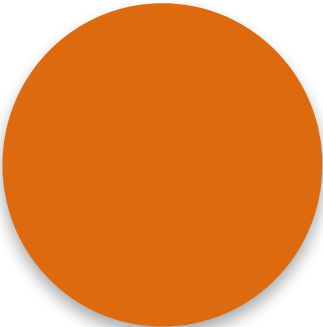

The landowner said, “Friend, I am not being unfair to you. Didn’t you agree to work for a denarius? Take your pay and go. I want to pay the people who were hired last the same as I paid you. Don’t I have the right to do what I want with my own money? Or are you envious because I am generous?”

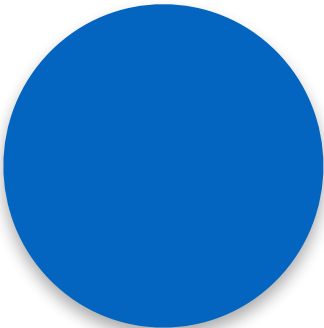

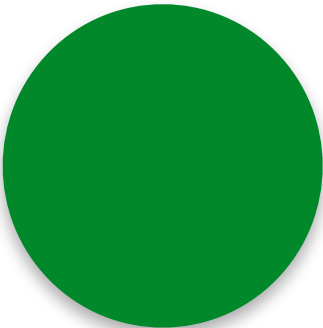

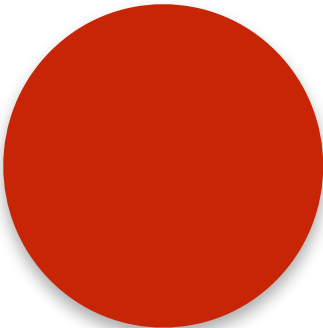

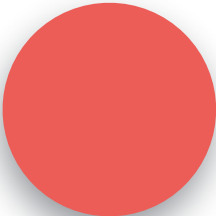

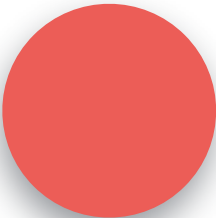

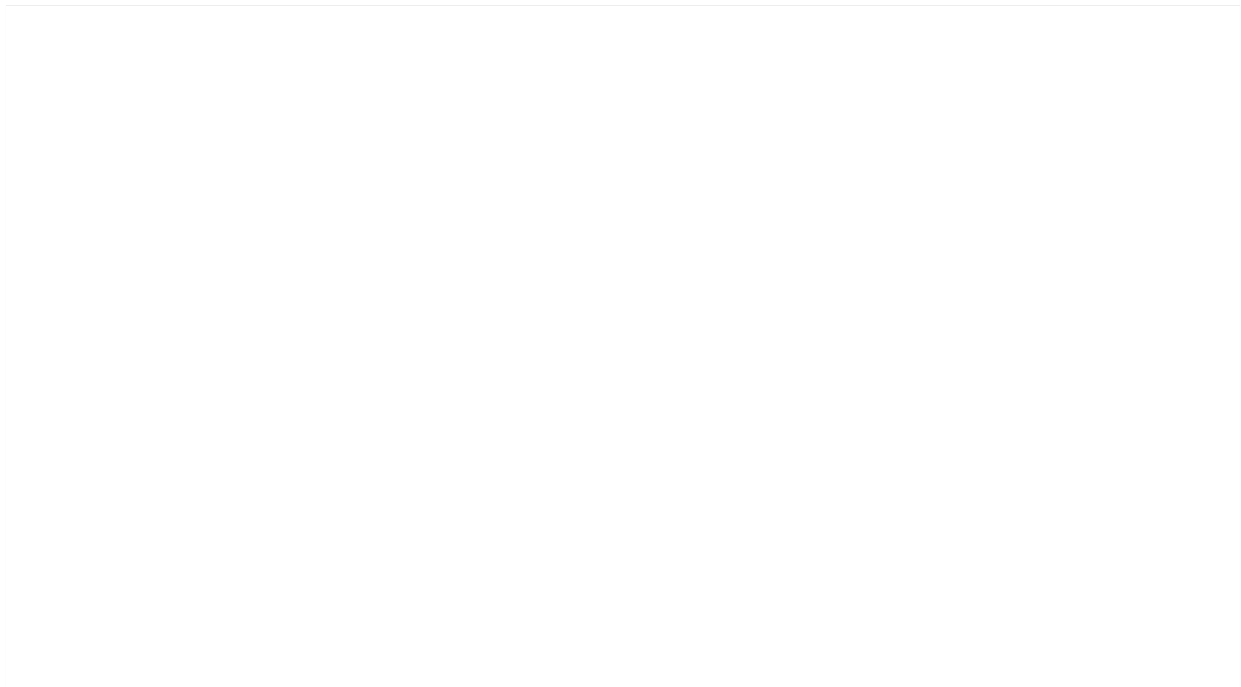

the
paradox of heaven and
hell

The following passage from the Catechism of the Catholic Church describes the kind of view wanted to discuss:

just and the unjust,' will precede the Last eternity in life

Judgment. Christ will come "in his glory, and all the angels with him... Before him will be gathered another as a shepherd separates the sheep from the 1038. The resurrection of all the dead, 'of both the but the goats at the left.... and they will go away all the nations, and he will separate them one from into external punishment, but the rights into goats, and he will place the sheep at his right hand,

One topic often associated with belief in God is the topic of life after death.

many of the major monotheistic religions practiced with the existence of a perfectly good Good?

Our first question today is: what we are told about life after death by both the just and the unjust," will proceed 1038. The reservation of the dead, "of the Last Judgment. . . Christ will come "in this glory, and all the angels with him . . .

Before him will be gathered all the nations, right hand, but the goat at the left... and

and the wild sheep are then from another but the rights are all in it.

as a shepherd separates the sheep from the they will go away into eternal punishment, goats, and the wild prairie sheep at his

This certainly seems like a picture according to which, after death, God passes judgement on all of us, and on the basis of our life, decides that some of us will got to heaven forever, and some to hell forever. (If not 'forever', then the talk of the last judgment wouldn't make much sense.)

Turned-in showed why it is plausible that respo to the argument from evil view of life after death we get here on pain of being perfectly good?

must depend on the possibility of life after death. We will now ask: is the kind of

evil & lives
not worth
living

Let's try to layout Sider's reasoning by isolating the various features of the the existence of a perfectly good God.

traditional doctrine of heaven and hell that he thinks are inconsistent with “A certain traditional conception of the afterlife is binary. After death one proceeds either to heaven or hell. Heaven is very, very good; hell is very, very bad. There are no possibilities for the afterlife other than heaven and hell, and membership in heaven or hell is never indeterminate or a matter of degree. The problem with the binary conception is that it contradicts God's justice. God must employ some criterion to decide who goes to heaven and who goes to hell. No reasonable criterion would be sharp; any reasonable criterion will have borderline cases. But the binary conception of the afterlife allows for no corresponding fuzziness in how the dead are to be treated. Hell must therefore contain people who are nearly indiscernible in relevant respects from people in Heaven. No just God would allow such a monstrously unfair thing.”

It is part of the traditional doctrine that God decides whether people go to heaven and hell based on certain properties of these people. We will have Let's call them the relevant properties.

open for what those properties might be; just have a name for them, seems to give the defender of the afterlife further main options.

It seems difficult to deny Justice, Badness, or Divine Control. So that

Proportion- ality

