

Our topic today can be introduced by a question raised by Marilyn Adams:

“Suppose for the sake of argument that horrendous evil could be included in maximally perfect world orders. ...

Would the fact that God permitted horrors because they were means to His end of global perfection make the participant's life more tolerable, more worth living for him/her?”

Many have thought not. A perfectly good being would not create beings whose lives were not worth living for them, just to add to the total greatness of creation.

A reasonable argument can be made that there are. Some children are born with conditions which make their lives very short and painful. Other people suffer such terrible evils that they question whether their lives were worth living.

The implicit assumption that Adams is making is that a good God would make every human life worth living.

Suppose that there were some human being whose life was not worth living for him or her. Would a perfectly good being be justified in creating such a being, even if there were outweighing goods for others which could not be realized without his or her existence?

Are there people whose lives are not worth living for them?

the paradox of heaven and
hell

replies to the paradox

evil & lives
not worth
living

Our top day can be introduced by a question raised by Marilyn Adams:

whose lives were not worth living for them, just to add to the total greatness of creation.

Many thought not. A perfectly good being would not create beings

A reasonable argument can be made that there are. Some children are born suffer such terrible evils that they question whether it is worth

Living.

with conditions which make their lives very short and painful. Other people make every human life worth living.

The implicit assumption that Adams is making is that a good God would

Suppose that there were some human beings whose life was not worth living being, even if there were outweighing goods for others which could not be for him or her. Would a perfectly good being be justified in creating such a realized with or without his existence?

Are there people whose lives are not worth living for them?

the existence of a perfectly good God.

traditional doctrine of heaven and hell that he thinks are inconsistent with

Let's try to layout Sider's reasoning by isolating the various features of the

“A certain traditional conception of the afterlife is binary. After death one proceeds either to heaven or hell. Heaven is very, very good; hell is very, very bad. There are no possibilities for the afterlife other than heaven and hell, and membership in heaven or hell is never indeterminate or a matter of degree. The problem with the binary conception is that it contradicts God's justice. God must employ some criterion to decide who goes to heaven and who goes to hell. No reasonable criterion would be sharp; any reasonable criterion will have borderline cases. But the binary conception of the afterlife allows for no corresponding fuzziness in how the dead are to be treated. Hell must therefore contain people who are nearly indiscernible in relevant respects from people in Heaven. No just God would allow such a monstrously unfair thing.”

It is part of the traditional doctrine that God decides whether people go to heaven and hell based on certain properties of these people. We will have open for what those properties might be; just have a name for them, Let's call them the relevant properties.

seems to give the defender of the afterlife further main options.

It seems difficult to deny Justice, Badness, or Divine Control. So that the paradox of heaven and

hell

describes the kind of view wanted to discuss:

The following passage from the Catechism of the Catholic Church goats, and he will place the sheep at his right hand, just and the unjust,' will precede the Last eternis in die !!

another as a shepherd separates the sheep from the 1038. The resurrection of all the dead, 'of both the all the nations, and he will separate them one from the angels with him... Before him will be gathered but the goats at the left.... and they will go away into external punishment, but the rights into Judgment. Christ will come "in his glory, and all

One topic often associated with belief in God is the topic of life after death.

perfectly good Good?

Our first question today is: what we are told about life after death by many of the major monotheistic religions compatible with the existence of a both the just and the unjust," will proceed right hand, but the goat at the left... and this glory, and all the angels with him.

1038. The reservation of the dead, "of they will go away into eternal punishment, the Last Judgment. . . Christ will come "in Before him will be gathered all the nations, as a shepherd separates the sheep from the

but the rights are all in it.

goats, and the wild prairie sheep at his and the wild sheep are then from another

This certainly seems like a picture according to which, after death, God passes talk of the last judgment wouldn't make much sense.)

got to heaven forever, and some others to hell forever. (If not 'forever', then the judgement on all of us, and on the basis of our life, decides that some of us will must depend on the possibility of life after death. We will now ask: is the kind of view of life after death we get here on pain of being perfectly good?

Turned-in showed why it is plausible that respo to the argument from evil

evil & lives
not worth
living

of creation.

Many thought not. A perfectly good being would not create beings

whose lives were not worth living for them, just to add to the total greatness

with conditions which make their lives very short and painful. Other people

A reasonable argument can be made that there are. Some children are born suffer such terrible evils that they question whether their lives were worth living.

make every human life worth living.

The implicit assumption that Adam is making is that a good God would for him or her. Would a perfectly good being be justified in creating such a

Suppose that there were some human beings whose life was not worth living being, even if there were outweighing goods for others which could be realized with or without existence?

Are there people whose lives are not worth living for them?