

Let's suppose that the view that there are immaterial souls is true. Then your roommate is (either wholly or in part) an immaterial soul.

We've now encountered the main arguments for the view
that you are, either entirely or in part, an immaterial
thing.

We have already encountered two kinds of arguments
against that view.

The first are the “easy arguments” for materialism. Those seem to be more of a problem for the simple believer in immaterial souls than for the fusion believer in immaterial souls.

The second is the argument that we should not believe in souls for the same reason we don't believe in fairies: there is no good evidence for their existence. That might be countered with the knowledge argument or the conceivability argument.

Let's look at some others.

Here is something that seems possible: last night, the soul connected to your roommate's body could have been swapped out for a different one which has exactly the same apparent memories and personality.

You would, it seems, have no way of telling whether this happened. So you have no evidence that it did not happen. So, you do not know whether you have the same roommate as you did yesterday.

But of course you do know this. So the view that there are immaterial souls must be false.

More dramatically, the soul attached to your own body could have been swapped out last night. It seems that you would have no way of knowing whether this happened. After all, the new soul (which you are) could have been given the same personality and apparent memories as the old soul.

So you do not know whether you have been attached to this body for more than a day. But of course you do know that you have been attached to this body for more than a day. So, the view that there are immaterial souls must be false.

Call this the argument from soul-swapping. How should the believer in immaterial souls respond?

Here is another related argument.

Let's call Ferdinand before the accident "Ferdinand-" and Ferdinand after the accident "Ferdinand+".

Psychology-swapping

Ferdinand is a combination of a soul and a body. Suppose that Ferdinand suffers an accident which entirely changes his psychology. He has none of his former memories, and none of his former personality traits. He used to be very selfish; he's now very generous. He used to be best friends with Jane; now he finds Jane annoying, and prefers to spend time with Maria.

Suppose that Ferdinand- used to occasionally take some cash from your wallet. Ferdinand+ would never do this. Would you be right to blame Ferdinand+ for the actions of Ferdinand-?

It seems plausible that you would not blame Ferdinand+
for these actions. Remember: he has complete amnesia, and his behavior and attitudes now are entirely different.

soul is true. Then your roommate is (either wholly or in part) an immaterial soul.

Let's suppose that the view that there are immaterial

that you are, either entirely or in part, an immaterial

thing.

We've now covered the main arguments for the view

We have already encountered two kinds of arguments

against that view.

seem to be more of a problem for the simpler believer in

The first are the “easy arguments” for materialism. These souls.

There second is the argument that we should not believe in is no good evidence for their existence. That might be conceivability argument.

countered with the knowledge arguing that the

shouldn't believe in fairies: there been swapped out for a different one which has exactly the same apparent memories and personality.

should connect to your roommate's body could have

Here is something that seems possible: last night, the happened. So you have no evidence that it did not roommate as you did yesterday.

You would, it seems, have no way of telling whether this happen. So, you don't know whether you have the same are immaterial, so must be false.

But of course you do know this. So the view that there

More dramatically, the soul attached to your body happened. After all, the new soul (which you are) could you would have no way of knowing whether this memories as the old soul.

could have been swapped out last night. It seems that have been given the same personality and apparent than a day. So, the view that there are immaterial souls

this body for more than a day. But of course you do know that you have been attached to this body for more

must be false.

So you do not know whether you have been attached to Call this argument from soul-switching. How should the believer in immaterial souls respond?

Ferdinand after the accident 'Ferdinand+':

Let's all Ferdinand be the acident 'Ferdinand' and

Suppose that Ferdinand-used to occasionally take some

cash from your wallet. Ferdinand would never do this.

of Ferdinand-?

Would you be right to blame Ferdinand for the actions

for these actions. Remember: he has complete amnesia,

and his behavior and attitudes are entirely different.

It seems plausible that you would name Ferdinand +

Ferdinand after the accident "Ferdinand+".

Let's all Ferdinand be for the acident 'Ferdinand-' and

Psychology-swapping

Ferdinand is a combination of a soul and a body. Suppose that Ferdinand suffers an accident which entirely changes his psychology. He has none of his former memories, and none of his former personality traits. He used to be very selfish; he's now very generous. He used to be best friends with Jane; now he finds Jane annoying, and prefers to spend time with Maria.

Suppose that Ferdinand used to occasionally take some

cash from your wallet. Ferdinand would never do this.

Would you be right to blame Ferdinand for the actions

for these actions. Remember: the has_complete method,

and his behavior and attitudes are entirely different.

It seems plausible that you would name Ferdinand +