argument
reformulated

Some evil exists.

We now have six claims which, as Mackie says, will all look quite plausible to someone who believes in God. What remains is to show that they lead to contradiction.

If God exists, then God
can do anything.

If God exists, then God
eliminates as much evil
as God can.

If God exists, then God
eliminates all evil.

If God exists, then there is no evil.

There is no evil.

God exists.

If God exists, then God is omnipotent.

If something is omnipotent,
it can do anything.

If something is wholly good, it always eliminates as much evil as it can.

If God exists, then God is wholly good.

the 1990s, the number of people with a mental health problem has increased by 50% (Mental Health Foundation 2000).

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the needs of people with mental health problems, and the importance of providing them with appropriate services. However, there is a significant gap between what is known and what is done. For example, although there is a growing awareness of the need to provide people with mental health problems with appropriate services, there is a significant gap between what is known and what is done. This is due to a number of factors, including a lack of resources, a lack of training, and a lack of coordination between different services.

One of the main reasons for this gap is a lack of resources. There is a significant shortage of mental health services, particularly in the community. This is due to a number of factors, including a lack of funding, a lack of staff, and a lack of facilities. As a result, many people with mental health problems are unable to access the services they need.

Another reason for the gap is a lack of training. Many of the people who work in mental health services do not have the appropriate training and skills to provide the best care for people with mental health problems. This is due to a number of factors, including a lack of training opportunities, a lack of supervision, and a lack of ongoing education.

A third reason for the gap is a lack of coordination between different services. There is a significant lack of communication and coordination between different mental health services, which can lead to people receiving conflicting advice and being confused about what to do.

There are a number of ways in which this gap can be closed. One way is to increase the number of mental health services, particularly in the community. This can be done by increasing funding, recruiting more staff, and providing more facilities.

Another way is to improve the training and skills of the people who work in mental health services. This can be done by providing more training opportunities, increasing supervision, and providing ongoing education.

A third way is to improve the coordination between different services. This can be done by increasing communication and coordination between different mental health services, and by providing a single point of contact for people with mental health problems.

By addressing these issues, it is possible to close the gap between what is known and what is done, and to provide people with mental health problems with the services they need.
