Suppose, for the sake of argument that it is true that if we took away some of things that we regard as evils, we would then be more bothered by other, lesser evils. Does it follow from this that there is no evil in the world, or that the world would not be better if it did not contain the Holocaust?

What we call 'evil' is relative. If you took away something which seems bad to us — like the Holocaust — we would just regard other things as more evil, since there would be less bad things. And if we took away everything which we now think of as evil, we would just regard other things, which we now think of as minor annoyances, as evil.

No. In fact, the idea expressed in this passage seems to presuppose the existence of evils in our sense, rather than pose any sort of problem for the idea.

the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are poor has increased.

There are many reasons for this. One is that the world's population has grown so fast that the world's resources are being used up faster than they can be replaced.

Another reason is that the world's economy is not growing fast enough to create enough jobs for all the people who need them.

And a third reason is that the world's climate is changing, and this is causing more and more people to be poor.

So, what can we do to help the poor? There are many things we can do, but the most important thing is to make sure that everyone has access to the resources they need to live a decent life.

One way to do this is to make sure that everyone has access to clean water and electricity. Another way is to make sure that everyone has access to education and healthcare.

And finally, we need to make sure that everyone has access to a decent job. This is the most important thing of all, because without a job, people cannot earn the money they need to live.

So, if we want to help the poor, we need to make sure that everyone has access to the resources they need to live a decent life. This is the only way to make sure that everyone has a chance to succeed.

And that is the goal of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). We want to make sure that everyone has access to the resources they need to live a decent life.

So, if you want to help the poor, please contact the UNDP. We will be happy to help you in any way we can.

Thank you for your interest in helping the poor. We hope that you will be able to make a difference in the lives of the people who need it most.

Yours truly,
The United Nations Development Programme

The United Nations Development Programme is a global organization that works to help the world's poor.

It was founded in 1965 and has since then helped millions of people in over 170 countries.

The UNDP's work is based on three main pillars: development, democracy, and the environment.

Development is the most important pillar, and it is the one that the UNDP is most known for.

Democracy is the second pillar, and it is the one that the UNDP is also known for.

The environment is the third pillar, and it is the one that the UNDP is also known for.

So, if you want to help the poor, please contact the UNDP. We will be happy to help you in any way we can.
