

Here is how Libet describes the instructions given to these subjects:

In the central experiment described in the reading for today, subjects were told to look at a clock with a dot which moved rapidly in circles around the clock.

Subjects were then asked to note where the spot on the clock was when they had the urge, or desire, to flex. This was used to record the time of, as Libet thought of it, the subject's conscious willing to flex his or her hand. Libet called this the "W time."

good?

“The subject was asked to wait for one complete revolution of the CRO spot and then, at any time thereafter when he felt like doing so, to perform the quick, abrupt flexion of the fingers and/or wrist of his right hand. ... the subject was instructed to ‘let the urge to act appear on its own at any time without any preplanning or concentration on when to act’ ...”
