

Some people think that philosophy is of no relevance to everyday concerns.

I hope that our class has disabused you of this notion. However, in this last class, I would like to turn the tools of philosophical analysis on two questions of great current concern.

Was the College Football Playoff
committee's decision to exclude
Notre Dame competent, or
incompetent?

Was the College Football Playoff committee's decision to exclude Notre Dame honest, or corrupt?

Logically that there are four exclusive and exhaustive possibilities.

The decision
was
competent
and honest.

The decision
was
competent
and corrupt.

The decision
was
incompetent
and honest.

The decision
was
incompetent
and corrupt.

Here is an argument against the first possibility.

The argument is valid, and the first premise is obvious. It remains therefore to demonstrate the second premise.

The committee's task is to rank the country's football teams from best to worst, based on their performance. This is a general kind of task. One might also seek to similarly rank the best universities, or best philosophy departments, or best cars, or whatever.

One may rely on various principles in constructing rankings of this kind, and the appropriate principles will of course depend on the ranking. Nonetheless we can isolate one general kind of principle which one might use, which I will call a magic touching rule.

A magic touching rule is a rule which says that when two of the ranked items are 'touching' — i.e., adjacent in the rankings — then we look to a special extra condition — this is the magic part — to see whether the two touching items in the ranking should have their spots flipped.

Magic touching rule

If two teams in the ranking are touching and played head to head and the lower ranked team defeated the higher ranked team then the teams' rankings are flipped.

The committee employs a rule of this kind.

1. If the committee's decision was competent and honest, then the committee did not rely on absurd principles in making its decision.
2. The committee relied on absurd principles in making its decision.

C. The committee's decision was not competent and honest. (1,2) current concern.

hope that our class has disabled you of this notion. However, in this last class, I would like to turn the topic of philosophical analysis into questions of great

Was the College Football Playoff
committee's decision to exclude
Notre Dame competent, or
incompetent?

Was the College Football Playoff
committee's decision to exclude
Notre Dame honest, or corrupt?

The decision
was
competent
and honest.

The decision
was
competent
and corrupt.

The decision
was
incompetent
and honest.

The decision
was
incompetent
and corrupt.

2. The committee relied on absurd principles in honest, then they committed not rely on

1. If the committee's decision was competent and absurd principles in making its decision.

honest.(1,2)

The committee's decision was not competent and making its decision.

remains therefore to demonstrate the second premise.

The argument is valid, and the first premise is obvious. It the best universities, or best philosophy departments, or best

The committee's task is to rank the country's football teams from best to worst, based on their performance. This is a cars, or whatever.

general kind of task. One might also seek to similarly rank call it magic touch thing rule.

dependent on the ranking. Nonetheless we can isolate one of this kind, and the appropriate principles will of course general kind of principle which one might use, which will

One may rely on various principles in constructing rankings

A magical thinking rule is a rule which says that when two of rankings — then we look to a special extra condition — this

the ranked items are 'touching' i.e., adjacent in the

is the magic part — whether the two touching items

in the rankings should have their spots flipped.

