

the basic
idea

does free
will explain
any evil?

A large, solid orange circle with a subtle drop shadow, centered on a white background. Inside the circle, the text "does free will explain all evil?" is written in white, lowercase, sans-serif font, arranged in three lines.

does free
will explain
all evil?

“Traditional free-will approaches - with their move to shift responsibility and/or blame for evil away from God and onto personal creatures - are stalemated by horrendous evil. Human radical vulnerability to horrors cannot have its origin in misused created freedom, because - even if one accepted the story of Adam’s fall as historical (which I do not) - the way it is told, humans were radically vulnerable to horrors from the beginning, even in Eden. The framework within which the primal ancestors made their choices was such that obedient choices meant persistence of the status quo, while disobedient choices would result in the horrendous disarray such as humans have experienced ever since. Even if Adam’s and Eve’s choices are supposed to be somehow self-determined, the fact that the consequences amplify far beyond their capacity to conceive and hence to intend - viz., to horrors of which ex hypothesi they had no prior experience and of which they could therefore have no adequate conception - is not something for which humans are responsible. Rather it is a function of the interaction between human agency and the wider framework within which it is set, and God is responsible for creating human beings in such a framework!”

Surely many events such as these occurred before human beings were on the scene; and surely at least some animal suffering of this kind is an evil.

This gives us the resources to construct a new argument:

But is it really plausible that the good of that persons free choice
outweighs the evil caused by the act?

If not, this gives us another argument:

The reasoning given for rejecting premise (2) in the tsunami argument would not seem to apply here.

Let's look at one last argument from particular evils. This focuses on especially horrific examples of human-caused evil. These might include rape, torture, murder, or child abuse.

Presumably God has the power to prevent these. Let's concede that for God to prevent these would involve God limiting someone's free will (the free will of the person who perpetrated the act). Let's also concede that to take away this free choice would be to take away a good.

1. Some instance of rape, torture, murder, or child abuse is a great evil.
2. There is no good which outweighs this event and which is such that an omnipotent being could not have brought about the good without the evil.
3. A perfectly good being would eliminate every evil unless there was a good which outweighed that evil and it was impossible for that being to eliminate the evil without eliminating the good.
4. There is no omnipotent and perfectly good being.
(1,2,3)
5. If there is no omnipotent and perfectly good being,
God does not exist.

C. God does not exist. (4,5)

THE ARGUMENT FROM HORRIFIC EVILS

beings were on the scene; and surely at least some animal

Surely many events such as the current before human suffering of this kind is evil.

outweighs the evil caused by the act?

But is it really plausible that the god of that person free choice argument would not seem to apply here.

The reasoning given for rejecting premise (2) in the tsumi

These might include rape, torture, murder, or child abuse.

focus on especially horrific examples of human-caused evil.

Let's look at one last argument from particular evils. This someone's free will (the free will of the person who perpetrated

Presumably God has the power to prevent these. Let's concede that for God to prevent these would involve God limiting would be to take away a good.

the act). Let's also concede that to take away this free choice

2. There is no good without we ighs this event and which

1. Some instances of rape, torture, murder, or child is such that an input being cut does not have bringht about the good without the evil.

(1, 2, 3)

abuse is a great evil.

3. A perfectly good being would eliminate every evil

evil without evil initiating the good.

5. If there is no omnipotent and perfectly good being;

unless there was a good which outweighed that evil

4. There is no omnipotent and perfectly good being.

and it was impossible for that being to elicit the

C. God does not exist. (4,5)

God does not exist.

the basic
idea

does free
will explain
any evil?

does free
will explain
all evil?

there could be evil in a world with a omnipotent and perfectly good

Summing up so far: we have seen that Frege will promise to explain how

God. It can explain that, it seems, if we make the following assumption:

there are possible
situations which an omnipotent
being cannot bring about

we have free will

free will is a great good

the ability
to harm others
is a great good

Free will cannot explain any evil.

Free will can explain some evil; but it can't explain all of the evil we find in the world.

does free
will explain
any evil?

1. Some instance of rape, torture, murder, or child abuse is a great evil.
2. There is no good which outweighs this event and which is such that an omnipotent being could not have brought about the good without the evil.
3. A perfectly good being would eliminate every evil unless there was a good which outweighed that evil and it was impossible for that being to eliminate the evil without eliminating the good.
4. There is no omnipotent and perfectly good being.
(1,2,3)
5. If there is no omnipotent and perfectly good being,
God does not exist.

C. God does not exist. (4,5)

But is it really plausible that the god of that person's free choice

outweighs the evil caused by the act?

If not, this gives us another argument:

1. Some instance of rape, torture, murder, or child abuse is a great evil.
2. There is no good which outweighs this event and which is such that an omnipotent being could not have brought about the good without the evil.
3. A perfectly good being would eliminate every evil unless there was a good which outweighed that evil and it was impossible for that being to eliminate the evil without eliminating the good.
4. There is no omnipotent and perfectly good being.
(1,2,3)
5. If there is no omnipotent and perfectly good being,
God does not exist.

C. God does not exist. (4,5)

