

the basic
idea

does free
will explain
any evil?

A large, solid orange circle with a subtle drop shadow, centered on a white background. Inside the circle, the text "does free will explain all evil?" is written in white, lowercase, sans-serif font, arranged in three lines.

does free
will explain
all evil?

“Traditional free-will approaches - with their move to shift responsibility and/or blame for evil away from God and onto personal creatures - are stalemated by horrendous evil. Human radical vulnerability to horrors cannot have its origin in misused created freedom, because - even if one accepted the story of Adam’s fall as historical (which I do not) - the way it is told, humans were radically vulnerable to horrors from the beginning, even in Eden. The framework within which the primal ancestors made their choices was such that obedient choices meant persistence of the status quo, while disobedient choices would result in the horrendous disarray such as humans have experienced ever since. Even if Adam’s and Eve’s choices are supposed to be somehow self-determined, the fact that the consequences amplify far beyond their capacity to conceive and hence to intend - viz., to horrors of which ex hypothesi they had no prior experience and of which they could therefore have no adequate conception - is not something for which humans are responsible. Rather it is a function of the interaction between human agency and the wider framework within which it is set, and God is responsible for creating human beings in such a framework!”

Surely many events such as these occurred before human beings were on the scene; and surely at least some animal suffering of this kind is an evil.

This gives us the resources to construct a new argument:

But is it really plausible that the good of that persons free choice outweighs the evil caused by the act?

If not, this gives us another argument:

1. Some instance of rape, torture, murder, or child abuse is a great evil.
2. There is no good which outweighs this event and which is such that an omnipotent being could not have brought about the good without the evil.
3. A perfectly good being would eliminate every evil unless there was a good which outweighed that evil and it was impossible for that being to eliminate the evil without eliminating the good.
4. There is no omnipotent and perfectly good being.
(1,2,3)
5. If there is no omnipotent and perfectly good being,
God does not exist.

C. God does not exist. (4,5)

We have now laid out three arguments based, not on the existence of some evil in the world, but based on the existence of particular evils: the evil caused by natural disasters, the evil of pre-human suffering, and especially horrific evils.

THE ARGUMENT FROM HORRIFIC EVILS

suffering of this kind is evil.

beings were on the scene; and surely at least some animal

Surely many events such as the current before human

outweighs the evil caused by the act?

But is it really plausible that the god of that person's free choice

2. There is no good which outweighs this event and which

1. Some instances of rape, torture, murder, or child

3. A perfectly good being would eliminate every evil

(1, 2, 3)

is such that an infinitesimal being could not have

and it was impossible for that being to initiate the

unless there was a good which outweighed that evil

5. If there is no omnipotent and perfectly good being;

bringht about the good without the evil.

evil without evil initiating the good.

abuse is a great evil.

4. There is no omnipotent and perfectly good being.

C. God does not exist. (4,5)

God does not exist.

evils: the evil caused by natural disasters, the evil of pre-human

We have now laid out three arguments based, not on the existence

suffering, and especially horrific evils.

of some evil in the world, but based on the existence of particular

Free will cannot explain any evil.

Free will can explain some evil; but it can't explain all of the evil we find in the world.

does free
will explain
any evil?

does free
will explain
all evil?

Summing up so far: we have seen that Frege will promise to explain how

God. It can explain that, it seems, if we make the following assumption:

there could be evil in a world with a omnipotent and perfectly good

there are possible
situations which an omnipotent
being cannot bring about

we have
free will

free will is
a great good

the ability
to harm others
is a great good

the basic
idea

does free
will explain
any evil?

about the good without the strain.

impossible for that being to eliminate the evil without

2. There is no good without weight and which is such that an important being does not have enough

Some instances of rape, torture, murder, or child abuse is a greatenvi

3. Perfectly good being would eliminate every evil

there was a good weight and it was eliminating the good.

5 If there is no merit and perfectly good being, God

4. There is no omnipotent and perfectly good being. (1, 2, 3)

does not exist.

c. God does not exist. (4,5)

The argument from horrific evils evil: the evil caused by natural disasters, the evil of pre-human

suffering, and especially horrific evils.

We have now laid out the arguments based, not on the existence of some evil in the world, but based on the existence of particular