

the basic idea

does free
will explain
any evil?

does free
will explain
all evil?

The most prominent attempt to answer this question focuses on the good of free will:

For every evil in the world, there is some greater good which even God could not have brought about without allowing that evil.

The free will defense

Because free will is a good, a wholly good being might wish for others to have free will. But it is impossible to both give free will to creatures and stop them from using that free will to do evil. (To do the latter would be to take away, to that extent, their free will.) Hence a wholly good creature might well not eliminate evil which it was within its power to eliminate, when doing so would be an infringement on the free will of the creature causing the evil.

The key question is what this could be.

The most prominent attempt to answer this question

focused on the good of free will:

Free will cannot explain any evil.

Free will can explain some evil; but it can't explain all of the evil we find in the world.

the basic
idea

does free
will explain
any evil?

there could be evil in a world with a omnipotent and perfectly good

Summing up so far: we have seen that Frege will promise to explain how

God. It can explain that, it seems, if we make the following assumption:

there are possible
situations which an omnipotent
being cannot bring about

we have free will

free will is a great good

the ability to harm others
is a great good

does free
will explain
any evil?

A large, solid orange circle with a subtle drop shadow, centered on a white background. Inside the circle, the text "does free will explain all evil?" is written in white, lowercase, sans-serif font, arranged in three lines.

does free
will explain
all evil?

The most prominent reply to Mackie's argument focuses on the good of free will:

The problem, as we've seen, is that in the case of some evils it is hard to see what the corresponding good could be.

focused on the good of free will:

The most prominent attempt to answer this question

For every evil in the world, there is some greater good which even God could not have brought about without allowing that evil.

The free will defense

Because free will is a good, a wholly good being might wish for others to have free will. But it is impossible to both give free will to creatures and stop them from using that free will to do evil. (To do the latter would be to take away, to that extent, their free will.) Hence a wholly good creature might well not eliminate evil which it was within its power to eliminate, when doing so would be an infringement on the free will of the creature causing the evil.

The key question is what this could be.