

the basic
idea

does free
will explain
any evil?

A large, solid orange circle with a subtle drop shadow, centered on a white background. Inside the circle, the text "does free will explain all evil?" is written in white, lowercase, sans-serif font, arranged in three lines.

does free
will explain
all evil?

1. Some instance of rape, torture, murder, or child abuse is a great evil
 2. There is no good which outweighs this event and which is such that an omnipotent being could not have brought about the good without the tsunami.
 3. A perfectly good being would eliminate every evil unless there was a good which outweighed that evil and it was impossible for that being to eliminate the evil without eliminating the good.
 4. There is no omnipotent and perfectly good being. (1,2,3)
 5. If there is no omnipotent and perfectly good being, God does not exist.
-

C. God does not exist. (4,5)

“Traditional free-will approaches - with their move to shift responsibility and/or blame for evil away from God and onto personal creatures - are stalemated by horrendous evil. Human radical vulnerability to horrors cannot have its origin in misused created freedom, because - even if one accepted the story of Adam’s fall as historical (which I do not) - the way it is told, humans were radically vulnerable to horrors from the beginning, even in Eden. The framework within which the primal ancestors made their choices was such that obedient choices meant persistence of the status quo, while disobedient choices would result in the horrendous disarray such as humans have experienced ever since. Even if Adam’s and Eve’s choices are supposed to be somehow self-determined, the fact that the consequences amplify far beyond their capacity to conceive and hence to intend - viz., to horrors of which ex hypothesi they had no prior experience and of which they could therefore have no adequate conception - is not something for which humans are responsible. Rather it is a function of the interaction between human agency and the wider framework within which it is set, and God is responsible for creating human beings in such a framework!”

Surely many events such as these occurred before human beings were on the scene; and surely at least some animal suffering of this kind is an evil.

This gives us the resources to construct a new argument:

The argument from horrific evils

We have now laid out three arguments based, not on the existence of some evil in the world, but based on the existence of particular evils: the evil caused by natural disasters, the evil of pre-human suffering, and especially horrific evils.

2. There is no good which outweighs this event and which is such that an omnipotent being could not have brought about the good without the tsunami.

Each of these arguments relies on the following premise:

One argument against (3) uses the example of a prison sentence. Suppose that someone is justly convicted of a crime, and sentenced to 10 years in prison. Suppose further that this sentence is just.

Now suppose that you are given the chance to reduce the sentence by 1 day. If the above principle is true, it looks like you should.

But suppose we keep giving you this opportunity. Using the above principle, you will keep reducing the sentence, until it is 0 days in length.

But that seems like the wrong result. But if it is the wrong result, then it looks like (3) must be false. Does this sort of example in fact show that (3) is false?

2. There is no good which outweighs this event and which is such that an omnipotent being could not have brought about the good without the evil.

3. A perfectly good being would eliminate every evil unless there was a good which outweighed that evil and it was impossible for that being to eliminate the evil without eliminating the good.

2. There is no good without weight and which is

Some instances of rape, torture, murder, or child abuse is a

about the good without the strain.

impossible for that being to eliminate the evil without does not exist.

such that an important being does not have enough

4. There is no omnipotent and perfectly good being. (1, 2, 3)

3. Perfectly good being would eliminate every evil

there was a good weight and it was

5 If there is no merit and perfectly good being, God

eliminating the good.

greatenvi

c. God does not exist. (4,5)

suffering of this kind is evil.

beings were on the scene; and surely at least some animal

Surely many events such as the current before human of some evil in the world, but based on the existence of particular evils: the evils caused by natural disasters, the evil of pre-human

We have now laid out three arguments based, not on the existence suffering, and especially horrific evils.

is still that important

about the good with the tsuririri.

being or would not have brought

2. There is no god which outweighs this event and which

One argument against (3) uses the example of a prison sentence. Suppose prison. Suppose further that this sentence is just.

that someone is justly convicted of a crime, and sentenced to 10 years in

Now suppose that you are given the chance to reduce the sentence by 1 day. If the above principle is true, it looks like you should.

But suppose we keep giving you this opportunity. Using the above principle, you will keep reducing the sentence, until it is 0 days in length.

But that seems like the wrong result. But if it is the wrong result, then it looks like (3) must be false. Does this example in fact show that(3) is false?

oninput event being fired

QVil.

the good with the

omit weights this event and not have brought about

2. There is no good which

which is which that all

eliminating the good.

3. Perfectly good being world

there was a good which to eliminate the evil within

was impossible for that being eliminate every evil

but weighed that evil and it

Free will cannot explain any evil.

Free will can explain some evil; but it can't explain all of the evil we find in the world.

does free
will explain
any evil?

A large orange circle with a subtle drop shadow, containing the text "does free will explain all evil?" in white, bold, sans-serif font.

does free
will explain
all evil?

the basic
idea

does free
will explain
any evil?

there could be evil in a world with a omnipotent and perfectly good

Summing up so far: we have seen that Frege will promise to explain how

God. It can explain that, it seems, if we make the following assumption:

there are possible
situations which an omnipotent
being cannot bring about

we have
free will

free will is
a great good

the ability
to harm others
is a great good

2. There is no good which outweighs this event and which is such that an omnipotent being could not have brought about the good without the evil.

3. A perfectly good being would eliminate every evil unless there was a good which outweighed that evil and it was impossible for that being to eliminate the evil without eliminating the good.

But suppose we keep giving you this opportunity. Using the principle, you will keep reducing the sentence, until it is 0 days in length.

it looks like (3) must be false. Does this example in fact show that (3) is false?

But that seems like the wrong result. But if it is the wrong result, then