Suppose now that Isabel decides “on her own” to poison the coffee and murder her husband. Then the following all look plausible.

Isabel is responsible for poisoning the coffee.

If Isabel is responsible
for poisoning the coffee,
then her act of poisoning
the coffee is free.

Isabel's act of poisoning the coffee is free.

An act can be free even if it is necessitated by facts about which the agent has no choice.

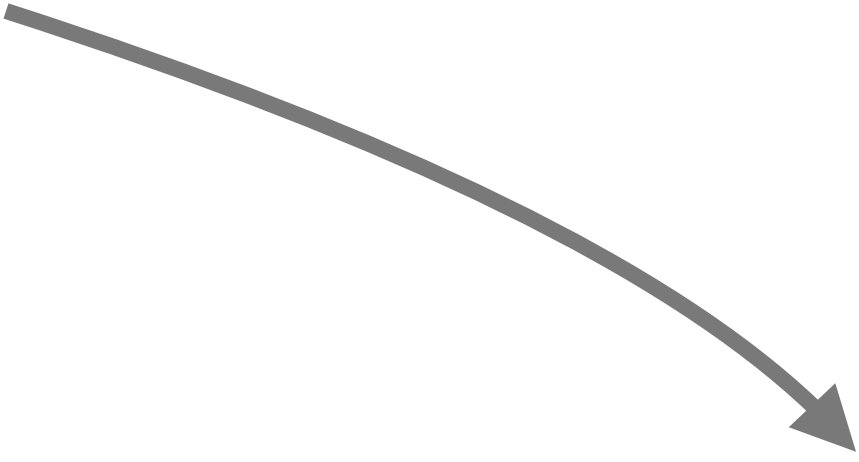

Isabel had no choice
about the chip being inserted into her brain.

The chip being inserted into Isabel's brain necessitates that she will poison the coffee.

But that is just the negation of the No
Choice/Necessitation
Principle.
